In his memoirs, made many decades later (in the 60s), A. Yermekov notes the circumstances of the acquaintance:

"In 1912, I entered the Tomsk Technological Institute, at the geological exploration faculty. Arriving in Tomsk, I settled down with housing, got used to it and decided to visit G. N. Potanin.

In his face, it seemed to me, all the sorrows of the saddest of our people were gathered. Potanin showed great interest in foreigners, knew their way of life, customs and in every possible way contributed to the preservation of the original culture.

Once G. N. Potanin looked me straight in the eye and said: "Look, Alike, your knowledge is the knowledge of all Kazakhs. Learn and teach others."

For many years, the Alash-Orda movement was regarded as counter-revolutionary, and its leaders were persecuted and repressed as enemies of the people. In 1920, A. Yermekov as a member of the Central Executive Committee of Kaz. The SSR is sent to Moscow, where it makes a report on the situation of Kazakhstan at a meeting chaired by V. I. Lenin. In the course of a heated discussion about the borders of the republic, he managed to achieve the return to Kazakhstan of a number of very important territories that previously belonged to Russia. Among them are the Korostylev steppe, Semipalatinsk, Akmola regions and the northern coast of the Caspian Sea. Today, these territories are of great importance: the capital of the Republic, Astana, is now located in the Akmola region, and the main oil and gas reserves are concentrated on the Caspian coast.
